Bonnie Parker and Clyde Barrow were the most famous criminal couple in U.S. history. During the height of the Great Depression, their gang evolved from petty thieves to nationally known bank robbers and murderers, joining the ranks of other gangsters of the era like John Dillinger, Pretty Boy Floyd and Baby Face Nelson—so called “public enemies” who captured the imagination of Americans laid low by the Depression.

Having grown up in the slums of West Dallas, they were little more than a local curiosity until photos of the couple were discovered at a hastily abandoned hideout in 1933. The image of a beret-clad Bonnie, cigar in mouth, pistol in hand, striking a defiantly provocative pose, would soon achieve near mythic status. Overnight, the country became transfixed by the scandalous images and press accounts of their improbable escapes and illicit romance. Newsreels across the country flashed images of a pixyish Bonnie and handsome Clyde, with his custom suits and Browning automatic rifles, turning them into the underworld’s dark prince and princess of crime.

Their newfound notoriety would force the outlaw lovers to take even greater risks as the hunt to capture them kicked into overdrive. Their two year crime spree ended when the couple was betrayed by a friend and shot dead at a police roadblock in Louisiana on May 23, 1934. Told through interviews with cultural historians and descendants of the outlaws and those who captured them, Bonnie & Clyde is the true story of the most famous outlaw couple in United States history.
