In 2017 alone, over 9,000 wildfires decimated 1.2 million acres in California—but California wasn't alone. In Europe, Portugal experienced similar wildfires, taking 66 lives after an intense heatwave. And in Greenland, even permafrost managed to catch fire. Alarmingly, 2017 may have only been the beginning. Scientists are predicting that 2018 will be even more severe. But what's causing these wildfires, and why are they worse than ever before? Join scientists in the field during the 2018 fire season as they race to understand what is behind the escalating wildfire threat.
